Beiles on the Sidewalk.

When two dear creatures that have not met for fully twenty-four hours, excounter one another on the trottoir of Fifth avenue, where the crowd is greatest and the pave-ment narrowest, it is like the clogging of a stream by the meeting of two toe floor. human current must part and flow on either gide of these fair obstructionists, and if there side of these fair obstructionists, and if there is much to talk about—and generally there is —a spirit of unholiness is engendered in many that come within range of the chin-chin-abulation of the belies. When I we men meet the case is different. They instinctively step to the nearest decreasy, or if that harber is not man, stand on the curb, thus leaving the pavement clear. This is one of the rare matters in which the sterner sex does not suffer by contrast with the fairer. Anyhow, two men that would meet and talk as women as often do, would be sorely hustled.—Pittabury often do, would be sorely trustled. - Pittslurg
